

This article explains the role of a Notary Public and the services that a Notary Public provides. It discusses who a Notary Public is, what they do, what a Notarial Certificate consists of and the fees charged by a Notary Public.

A. WHO IS A NOTARY PUBLIC?

“Notary Public” is a title recognised throughout the world. The office of a Notary Public has its origin in the ancient Roman period. In old England, Notaries Public were officers of the civil and canon law. Ships taking months to reach a foreign country would carry with them documents bearing the signature and wax seal of Notaries Public.

Nowadays, Notaries Public generally act to verify and authenticate international documents. A Notary Public is an officer of the law. In New South Wales, the functions and appointment of Notaries Public are governed primarily by the Public Notaries Act 1997 (NSW).

A Notary Public’s main function is to draw up and authenticate international documents. The authentication is carried out by the Notary Public by signing on the international document and application of their seal, which is usually a unique impressed red seal through the use of an iron embosser. A Notary Public also issues Notarial Certificates declaring the due execution of documents for international use.

In New South Wales, all or most Notaries Public are also Solicitors of the Supreme Court. Notaries Public are appointed by the Supreme Court after having practiced as a Solicitor for a substantial period of time in private practice and have undertaken a Notarial course and passed its examination.

B. NOTARY PUBLIC SERVICES

Ninety five percent of a Notary Public’s functions will comprise verifying signatures and authenticating documents for use internationally. In order to verify the document, a Notary Public will often need to ask of the person requesting the certificate several questions, such as:

- What is the nature of the document?
- For what purpose will the document be used?

In order to attest the signature, a Notary Public would likely ask the person requesting the certificate for a form of photo identification. The production of a current passport or a current driver licence would assist the identification of a particular individual.

Where the international document is in a language other than English, a Notary Public may use their discretion to decide whether or not the document should be translated.

In practice, the signature and seal of a NSW Notary Public will be accepted in the United Kingdom and in all British dominions (including the United States of America, Malaysia and Singapore) without further verification.

However, for international documents for use in countries not a signatory of the Hague Convention, such as Spain, Brazil and China, a NSW Notary Public’s signature and seal would usually need to be legalized or authenticated (verified) by the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs, located at Level 7, 26 Lee Street, Sydney.

The Department of Foreign Affairs would normally take one business day (overnight) to authenticate the Notary Public’s signature and seal. They could also issue a verification certificate called an Apostille. After the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs has authenticated the Notary Public’s signature and seal, the international document is then taken to the relevant Consulate or Embassy to authenticate the certificate issued by the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs. (The China Consulate takes up to four business days to issue their certificate.)
